A Message from Dr. Elnahal

In the last few weeks, much of the public conversation has focused on the work of our clinicians - and with good reason. Throughout this time, as always, I know that there is a diverse team of professionals that enable University Hospital to deliver incredible care for our patients, even in times of crisis.

I was honored yesterday to showcase the work of our Environmental Services department on NJTV news. The link to watch that segment is below. We are all relying on EVS to ensure that our rooms and facilities are cleaned and sanitized. And just like our clinical care teams, they also must take steps to protect themselves in this effort. By ensuring these rooms are clean, their work is protecting all of us and our patients.

The hard work, diligence, and professionalism of EVS is always important, but never more so than now. It was a privilege to showcase their work at this time when so much of our society is crucially depending on us.

Thank you to our EVS, emergency response, and infection control teams -- and to all of you. We are University Hospital, and together we will weather this storm, one day at a time.
